

Heritage Property Details

Name of Historic Place: Canadian Pacific Railway Station

Other Name(s): Theodore Historical Museum

Date of Origin: 1902

Historic Use: Station or Other Rail Facility

Current Use: Museum; Social, Benevolent or Fraternal Club

Location: Theodore

Street Address: 6 Christopher Street N

Architect: R.B. Pratt

Associated with: Canadian Pacific Railway Company

Formal Recognition

Type of Recognition: Municipal Heritage Property

Date of Recognition: April 12, 2000

Statement of Significance

The Canadian Pacific Railway Station is a Municipal Heritage Property located on five urban lots in the Village of Theodore. The property features a two-storey, wood-frame railway station which was constructed in 1902.

The heritage value of the Canadian Pacific Railway Station lies in its status as the last remaining example in Saskatchewan of a Type Nine Canadian Pacific Railway Station building. The Canadian Pacific Railway employed R.B. Pratt to develop a standard rural station plan that was elaborate and architecturally pleasing, yet practical. The Canadian Pacific Railway Station is an example of a Type Nine station building designed by Pratt, one of only five constructed in the province. The design combines the typical small railway station roof with overhanging eaves with a high peaked roof, and unique residential dormers for the stationmaster's living quarters. Closed as a railway station in the mid-1970's, the building was moved to a more central location in the community in 1974 for use as a senior citizens' centre.

Source:

Village of Theodore Bylaw No. 2-00.